My family and I are totally OPPOSED to consumers footing the bill for so-called "smart" meters, one of the most morally and environmentally offensive technologies to be found in contemporary cities.

If anything, consumers should be reimbursed by the corporations for having to live in such close proximity to these electrosmog-generating, corporate "assets".

Giving even more economic power to energy companies is tantamount to the consolidation of global fascism.

As for the manual meter reading fee - it's extortion pure and simple, but I'd gladly pay to have my "smart" meter removed from my premises.
